The purpose of this book is to set a research agenda around the interaction between cultural demands of immigrants and minority nations and establish basic normative arguments while advancing an institutional analysis for Quebec, Flanders and Catalonia.

Ricard Zapata-Barrero is associate professor of political theory at the Department of Social and Political Science, Universitat Pompeu Fabra (Barcelona). His main lines of research deal with contemporary issues of liberal democracy in contexts of diversity, especially the relationship between democracy, citizenship and immigration. He is Coordinator of the interdisciplinary research group on immigration (Grup de Recerca interdisciplinari sobre immigració - GRITIM ) and of the Master's degree on immigration management at UPF. — dcpis.upf.edu/~ricard-zapata/

Aristide Zolberg, Walter P. Eberstadt Professor of Political Science at the New School for Social Research, will present and engage in a dialogue with Professor Zapata-Barrero.
